THE DAUGHTERS of slain publicist Salvador Dacer have filed a multimillion-dollar civil suit against deposed President Joseph Estrada, fugitive Sen. Panfilo Lacson, and five other men before a United States District Court for the torture and extrajudicial killing of their father in 2000.

Carina Dacer, Sabina Dacer-Reyes, Amparo Dacer-Henson and Emily Dacer-Hungerford filed the complaint with the US District Court for the Northern District of California in San Francisco on Sept. 16 (Friday in Manila), citing the defendants' violation of the Alien Tort Claims Act (ATCA) and the Torture Victims Protection Act (TVPA).

The Dacer sisters are seeking jointly from the defendants compensatory damages amounting to $20 million and punitive damages worth $100

44 million Americans are living in poverty

WASHINGTON—The number of people living in poverty in the United States leapt by nearly four million last year to 43.7 million, the highest number since the US Census began collecting data on America's poor 51 years ago, officials said on Thursday.

One in seven people lived below the poverty line in 2009 in the world's richest nation, or on less than $22,000 a year for a family of four.

That put the poverty rate at 14.3 percent, the highest level since 1994, said David Johnson, head of the US Census Bureau's housing and household economic division.

The number of people without health insurance also reached a sorry record, sweeping past the 50-million

P-Noy still needs to fill 4,300 positions

By Norman Bordadora

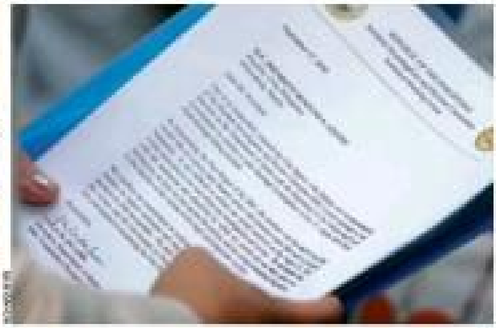

PRESIDENT AQUINO yesterday agreed there was a need for him to speedily fill up more than 4,000 government posts still vacant three months after he took office, and a top businessman warned leaving these posts open could give an impression of a government with no sense of urgency.

With only a week to go before a new ban on appointments kicks in due to the barangay elections on Oct. 25, Mr. Aquino admitted he still has 4,300 posts to fill in his administration.

"There is really an urgency to fill up all of the positions. There's actually a ban starting Sept. 25, if I'm not mistaken, due to the barangay elections," the President told business leaders at the Economic Man-

INVESTIGATORS YESTERDAY officially submitted to President Aquino their findings on the Aug. 23 hostage tragedy, but Malacañang withheld the immediate release of the names of the 12 people found responsible for a fiasco that embarrassed the country before the world.

Justice Secretary Leila de Lima and members of the special fact-finding committee she chairs handed Mr. Aquino their 83-page report but De Lima and Palace officials declined to reveal the names of those deemed accountable until after the President had pored over the report.

Panel members earlier said they would recommend charges against government officials and police officers as well as members of the media, whose live coverage of the bloody hostage drama provided controversy over how much leeway journalists should have in covering crisis situations.

"I cannot answer that. Otherwise, I will be preempting the President," De Lima told

A day of firsts for Pope in UK

LONDON—It is a day of firsts for the 83-year-old Pope Benedict XVI.

No pontiff has visited Lambeth Palace, the Anglican archbishop's London residence, or visited the historic abbey since the foundation of the Church of England when King Henry VIII broke with Rome in 1534.

The head of the Roman Catholic Church will hold joint prayers with the leader of the world's Anglicans on Friday (today in Manila) in a symbolic act of unity on the second day of a historic state visit to Britain.

The Pope will also attend a service at London's Westminster Abbey led by Archbishop of Canterbury Rowan Williams and meet with him at Lambeth Palace.

He is also delivering a speech at Westminster Hall—the historic heart of the Houses of Parliament—and addressing 3,000 young Catholics at an event in southwest London.

Building RP's future home design

By Charles E. Buban

WHEN PEOPLE ask architect Edgar Raformado about what sustainable house design should majority of Filipino families adopt in the near future, he always tell them it should be just like the bahay kubo (nipa hut) or the bahay na bato (stone house).

The chair of Green Architecture Advocacy of the Philippines or Green AP, a nonprofit civic organization that encourages the study and adoption of sustainability in design and construction, clarifies that his advice doesn't mean families to start building rickety bahay kubo or mestizo-looking bahay na bato.

"Appropriate some of their unique elements, modernize or redefine their look. Don't disregard them just because bahay kubo has been associated with poverty or believe that bahay na bato already belongs in the past. Be imaginative and one would be surprised that these two types of houses have qualities that architects or interior designers could use in order to make any modern-day house, beautiful and best of all sustainable," Raformado explains.

For those still not familiar, bahay kubo is still a popular house design in the provinces, where the structure is basically made of light and readily available materials such as bamboo and coconut, while the roof is made of cogon grass, nipa/palm leaves or cement.

Popular choice

On the other hand, bahay na bato is a popular choice of well-to-do families during the Spanish and American period and is characterized by a ground floor made of stones or bricks with the upper level made mostly of wood. Roofing is often made of clay tiles.

"There are so many reasons we should look back at these two classic Filipino house designs considering a number of their features may be considered "green," meaning they have the qualities that could contribute in creating a healthier environment and help in lowering household's energy bills," Raformado says.

Here are some of the ideas forwarded:

1 High ceilings. A typical bahay kubo or bahay na bato features very high ceilings—at least 3 meters high—which allows tropical heat to rise up while keeping the lower part of the rooms relatively cool for the occupants.

"Remember that heat rises so high ceilings can make a huge difference. A lot of houses built nowadays forget this fact so occupants are either forced to cope with the heat or turn their electric fans or aircon full blast and working for longer hours than necessary to survive the hot months," Raformado says.

2 Oversized windows. Ever wonder how Filipinos survived the heat during Spanish and American times? The secret lies in using oversized windows. Visit any surviving bahay na bato in Taal, Batangas, or in Vigan, Ilocos Sur, and you'll notice how wide and tall their windows are.

Such windows enable the hot air to go out while letting the cooler breeze in.

"If you analyze this design, it also allows natural light to come in. This also reduces the household's need to turn their lights on during the day," architect Ma. Luisa Reyes-Garcia explains.

3 Wide roof overhang. "If one would notice, majority of the bahay kubo have wide roof overhang. This is intentional as this design not only helps block direct sunlight but also prevents rain from entering the windows," Raformado says.

4 Adding a porch or balcony. A number of modern eco-houses designed by architect James Jao, an alumnus of London School of Economics and Political Science where he obtained his Master's degree in City Design and Social Science, feature a covered porch or balcony, which is actually a design borrowed from the bahay kubo.

"The design reflects the traditional Filipino way of life as this is the place where the households spend lazy afternoons taking a nap, reading books or newspapers, receiving or entertaining guests or just cool off during a warm and humid weather," Jao says.

5 Readily available materials. Looking back at the bahay kubo, one should be reminded that it uses readily available building materials: bamboo. This material is, in fact, more sustainable considering less fuel was spent in transporting such products from where it was harvested (a bamboo is the largest grass in the world and grows almost anywhere here in the Philippines).

"Bamboo has been used as a building material for centuries because when constructed properly, it is flexible enough to withstand strong winds or even an earthquake. It is cheaper to plant, grows faster than wood (matures in just four to six years) and can be harvested using less fossil fuel. Come to think of it, this is one of the better materials that this country could utilize in designing future homes," Raformado says.

He adds that the same goes with the bahay na bato as it similarly utilized the bricks or adobe stones that were manufactured within the area, thus helped the local industry to thrive for some time.

6 Stilts that elevate the house. A typical bahay kubo structure uses thick bamboo or wooden poles, elevating the house one or 2 m from the ground so as to protect the occupants from snakes and other wild animals, and provide them a place for keep-

'Sustainable construction now an obligation'

By Tessa R. Salazar

ENOUGH of the show and tell, it's time to put the money where the "green" is.

Property experts' explanations have made the picture clearer, and the tooling over to market. The construction industry has made a significant impact on the environment, on a global and long-term scale.

The recent years have also seen the local property sector take a closer look at greener themes. In 2009, World Building and Construction Exposition, considered the biggest construction expo in Asia, held at Philippine Trade Training Center in Pasay City featured almost 500 companies living up to the theme "Leading the way to sustainable development."

Early this September, Construction Show Manila (Mandaluyong 2010) held at SMX Convention Center in Pasay City also made environmental concerns its main theme through its Green Forum 2010. The forum hosted urban planners and architects as they shared their insights on sustainable man-made environments and technologies.

One of the exhibitors in Mandaluyong 2010 was cement and construction materials supplier Holcim. It showed it was serious in its own campaign for sustainable construction when it distributed literature of Holcim Foundation. The literature made clear that the foundation's advocacy for sustainable construction was "an obligation."

The foundation, established in 2003, is supported by Holcim but remains independent of its commercial interests.

It promotes and accelerates sustainable construction by providing seed funds for sustainable construction projects and research. These contributions, according to the Holcim Grants literature, allow for a broad range of interesting and important new ideas, regardless of origin, to be realized and to be followed by an audience of professionals.

Projects nominated for seed funding are assessed according to five target issues or criteria. Grants are always provided with cofunding together with a Holcim group company, which then supports and monitors the ongoing project.

The criteria for selecting projects place sustainability from a holistic perspective.

The first target issue is Progress. The project must demonstrate innovation at the forefront of sustainable construction, a "quantum leap" in comparison to conventional procedures.

The second issue is People, wherein the project must adhere to the highest ethical standards and support social equity at all stages of construction.

The third criterion is the Planet. The project must take ecological quality and energy conservation into heart. It must exhibit a sensible use and management of natural resources.

Fourth is Prosperity, and the project must prove to be economically feasible as well as innovative in its deployment of financial resources.

The fifth is Proficiency, which means the project must convey a high standard of architectural quality as to the manner in which it addresses its cultural and physical context.

For more details, and to find out how your concept project or project can qualify for Holcim Grants, log on to www.holcimawards.org.

Ayala makes its presence felt outside of Makati

By Tessa R. Salazar

TERRA-NOVA developments outside of Makati City is a clear indication that property giant Ayala, literally and figuratively, is expanding its horizons.

In Pasig City, Amaia Place by Ayala Land subsidiary Alveo Land offers suburban living within the city with lush pockets of greenery that comprise the development's landscape and a pedestrian-friendly community with tree-lined streets conducive for long walks. This so-called "boutique townhome community" features not more than 100 units spread over a 400-hectare area, thus devoting a total of 1.4 ha to open spaces. Amaia Place' sand modern architecture has a streamlined design, anchored on a subdued color scheme.

Other amenities and facilities are outdoor basketball courts, biking and jogging trails, an adult lap pool, kiddie pool and two kiddie playgrounds, three main parks and landscaped pocket parks. Open-air relaxation decks with lounge chairs and gazebos with landscaped views complete the suburban feel. The clubhouse facilities, however, can also cater to big city needs, with its multipurpose function halls, a game room and Wi-Fi connectivity.

3 new condos in BGC

In Bonifacio Global City in Taguig, Alveo Land's latest high-rise condominium developments at Two Serendra are now named The Aston, The Red Oak and The Meranti.

The Aston highlights oasis with "reflecting" ponds and children's pools. Kids can board a tree boat or play at the tree house. Sculpted fountains surround the children's pools.

The Red Oak is designed to exude relaxing ambience with its open spaces and refreshing water elements. There are also body spa pavilions, meditation gardens, floating cabanas, walking paths and dance and exercise studios.

The Meranti's landscaped garden is enclosed in glass and called Tropical Garden for formal social affairs. It also has a landscaped rooftop deck, Stellar Peak, which provides a grand view of the night sky.

Santierra

Further away from Metro Manila, at the burgeoning suburbs of Santa Rosa City in Laguna, is Ayala Land Premier's Santierra.

A residential community within Nuvali, which is Ayala Land's biggest development to date, Santierra is envisioned to possess the spaciousness of Nobel Park, Ayala Alabang and Alveo.

Fifty percent of the total land has been allocated for residential lots. The mandatory dual piping system which will be used throughout the neighborhood shall collect used water, which would then be treated and recycled. Rainwater that runs from the main road will be collected into gardens due to the controls.

The hottest ticket was the cheerdance competition–and how

by Jason Duplito
Contributor

IT WAS NOWHERE near dawn when the ticket line for this year's UAAP Samsung Cheerdance Competition (CDC) began snaking its way around Araneta Coliseum. It was only 9 p.m., a full 12 hours before the release of the tickets.

Dennis Leyeza, 26 and faculty member of the College of Science in UP Diliman, has been watching the event live for nine years straight; this year, he fell in line as early as 8:30 p.m. and he wasn't even the first in the queue—he was fifth.

"Payat kung payat, sakripisyo talaga," he said. (It was an all-nighter; a pure sacrifice.)

He explained—like in business, you'd invest in something you know you have a chance to win. In this case, bragging rights of being proud supporters of this year's cheerdance champions.

The UAAP Samsung Cheerdance Competition is the biggest single-day event in the sports body's history—bigger than an Ateneo-De La Salle basketball championship game. (Though it must be noted that all eight UAAP schools participate in cheerdance.)

The 2009 event drew a record-breaking crowd of 25,[illegible]; this year's event lured in almost 21,000. Araneta Coliseum has a maximum seating capacity of 18,000, clearly not enough to accommodate all CDC fans.

Hence, lining up at Araneta has become an infamous task for CDC fans. Twenty-three-year-old Justin Enriquez of UST lined up at 11 p.m. last year and was 16th in line. This year, he lined up at 8 p.m. and found himself at 28th.

Several hours later, he was aghast to find himself at about 140th of the line.

"Students ahead of us allowed their schoolmates to cut in the queue—as in by blocks, I'm not exaggerating," he said.

While infuriating, he said, he and supporters from cheerdance rival UP decided not to let it ruin their day. To pass the time, they cheered each UAAP school's cheer, except for the university from which the "line cutters" came from.

While UST fan (friendships are formed even with supporters of rival schools), he hopes the UAAP will find a way to improve its ticketing scheme because demand for the tickets has been increasing each year.

Inside Araneta

Lining up for tickets is one event; being inside Araneta is another.

Different UAAP school crowds make sure their voices stand out at the Big Dome on competition day. It is also not unusual for supporters to engage in "friendly" banters,

Behind the Scenes

UP in the air

By Arnie Opena
Student correspondent,
University of the Philippines

I'VE BEEN watching the UAAP Cheerdance Competition since I was in grade school. I would even record it using our VHS player (how Jurassic, I know!), for ideas and inspiration when I joined the pep squad in high school.

To this day, the UAAP Cheerdance Competition is the only event that can bring all eight schools in one venue. Not even the UAAP Season Opening can gather over 20,000 people wearing their school spirit.

Last Sept. 12 at the Araneta Coliseum, it was easy to tell which schools considered the competition a major event. The University of the Philippines area was jam-packed from patrons all the way up to general admission, Far Eastern University supporters spilled into the De La Salle University side, and the University of Santo Tomas fans held long, white balloons, making the crowd look like one giant sea anemone.

Their well-loved "Go Uste!" cheer succeeded in pumping up the entire crowd (including non-Tigers). In men's basketball, Ateneo and La Salle are consistent contenders for the Final Four. In the Cheerdance Competition, it has been UP, FEU, and UST playing round robin in the Top 3.

Signs

In each section, there were banners shouting, "Go (student's name)!" Some were even accompanied by pictures printed on tarps! The defending champions FEU hung a banner announcing, "Lightning can strike twice." Over at the UST area, they believed the stars were on their side: "Even astrology says so." 2010 is, after all, the Year of the Tiger.

UP showed their sense of humor: "Ye 14=CDC Champs!" In 2007, we had a winless record in men's basketball, but bagged first place in the Cheerdance Competition. Since we had another zero season, perhaps it was a sign that we were going to be champions in dance.

Before the DLSU Animo Squad performed, a girl beside me unfolded a sign that showed "Go Charlie!" in neon green letters. "Boyfriend ko," she explained. The manila paper occupied the entire row! A fellow UP Maroon from a higher row volunteered to help hold the sign up. "Nge, nakalingon kita, alang-alang sa pag-ibig!" By the end of the green routine, we were all screaming, "Go Charlie!"

UP FANS show their support with banners.

"HALABIRA!" was UP's battle cry with sunflower pompoms.

> Not even the UAAP Season Opening can gather over 20,000 people wearing their school spirit

Beginnings and endings

It is vital for all routines to have a powerful beginning and solid ending. The UST Salinggawi Dance Troupe's started their jaw-dropping routine with the dancers standing out of the huge wooden box donning tiger headdresses, a homage to their school's mascot.

Ateneo's Blue Babble Battalion ended with an inflatable eagle, which looked like Twitter's logo. Green flags spelling ANIMO marked the start of the La Salle routine, while the Philippine flag ended it. FEU went all out with props, finishing their almost flawless routine with the girls wearing tutus, the guys holding samurai swords, and the FEU building at the back.

Moving away from tradition

Both Ateneo and La Salle have come a long way since their traditional style of only the girls dancing and boys pumping on their knees. Now the men do flip, twist, and tumble, too. The Blue Babble Battalion surprised everyone by landing second in last year's competition. While the Animo Squad added a melodramatic slant to their performance, dancing to songs like "Nasi Balani" and "Bebot." It was unfortunate that their music was barely audible, dampening the energy.

UST's theme was clearly Asian, with Chinese fans, laced-up boots, and high ponytails to reinforce their motif. It seemed fitting because their stunts (example: one leg is held by lifters, and the other is arched at the back to touch the head, like a scorpion's tail) were perfect, reminding me of the Chinese acrobats from "Cirque du Soleil." Their routine was charged with energy from beginning to end.

UP pride

None of the teams used the traditional pompoms made of metallic paper. The closest pompom was UP's "bouquet" of sunflowers. Even the guys used them! It may be a nod to the sunflowers that grow on University Avenue every April.

UP Pep Squad drew inspiration from the Masskara Festival. "Hala bira!" was the battle cry. Their maroon costumes were accented by colorful headdress, which matched the audience's props. The men were in mohawks, while the girls sported the trademark UP Pep buns.

The UP Pep has a glowing résumé. In the UAAP CDC, UP Pep held the crown from 1999 to 2001, and 2007 to 2008. The five-year gap between their championships belonged to the Salinggawi Dance Troupe.

At the 3rd Cheerleading Asia International Open held in Japan last year, the UP Pep was the country's official representative. They placed third in the International Category, and bagged first prize in the Regular Category.

But of course, behind all those trophies and awards are sheer dedication and hard work. The team trains the entire year; rain or shine, practice goes on.

Rehearsals can run from four hours, seven days a week. The months leading up to the CDC requires more intensive practices.

In addition to gymnastics and dance, the Pep Squad also has yoga class once a week. They learn different techniques in all dance genres. Since they come from the State U, it is no surprise that they introduced cheers in Filipino to the UAAP.

One of the best and most creative tongue twisters is "Pagbaybay," which spells, "Unibersidad ng Pilipinas" in abakada: "U-Ni-Bi-Er-Si-Da-Ng-Pi-Li-Pi-Nas..."

Dance results

The Salinggawi Dance Troupe made it to the Top 3 again, landing 2nd runner-up. The tension was palpable between the 2nd runner-up and the 1st runner-up. The UP crowd burst into cheers after FEU was crowned 1st runner-up. "U-nibersidad ng Pilipinas!" we chanted simultaneously. When host Boom Gonzales declared the State U as champions, we drowned out the noise.

Congratulations to the winners of the UAAP Cheer Dance Competition! We can't wait for what next year will bring.

FEU went all out with props, girls in tutus, and guys in samurais.

UNIVERSITY of Santo Tomas fans hold long, white balloons, making the crowd look like one giant sea anemone.

Laureen Uy's style break

'What you wear is who you are.'

By Carlo Concepcion
Contributor

TWENTY-YEAR-OLD UNIVERSITY student Laureen Uy could have easily been introduced to enter the fashion scene with such heavy weight industry siblings, Preview magazine's [illegible] and [illegible] Uy. But that is not something Laureen allows to get in her way.

With dedication and purpose uncommonly found in such young individuals, Laureen paves her own way to the [illegible] as co-owner of Stylebreak, a fashion brand that [illegible] out as a multiply website, and has gained a young cult following. It has a showroom at Parkview Tower 2, Eastwood City, Libis, and its goods can be found at [illegible] at The Collective in Malugay St., Makati.

Young, cute, intelligent; it seems Laureen is ready to take on the scene. This rising stylista shows us how to step away from the large shadows and claim the spotlight on yourself.

Style profile:

Describe your style: I don't have a permanent style. I'm still in the age of experimenting.

Fashion icons: Kate Moss and Mary-Kate Olsen.

Best fashion advice I've received: What you wear is who you are.

What is your lazy day outfit?

Plaid polo, denim shorts, red lipstick and sunglasses.

What is your worst style moment in your life?

I tried wearing baggy jeans... it was the worst mistake of my life. (Laughs)

Is there such a thing as bad style for you?

It's all a matter of mixing and matching clothes correctly.

Do you have any cheap wardrobe updates?

The dresses and tops at Stylebreak are so nice and prices are so affordable.

What are your basic wardrobe essentials?

Anything black. Black tee, black tank, black jeans, etc.

What trend should go already?

Colored jeans. Do people still wear them? (Laughs)

What's the best tip you can give not to look like you are trying too hard with your outfit?

Don't wear too much accessories. Just balance it properly.

What's the perfect first date outfit?

I'll be safe and I will wear a stunning black dress so it won't look like I prepared too much.

I wouldn't introduce my boyfriend to my parents if he was wearing...

Anything Fubu. (Laughs)

My mom hates it when I dress...

BENCH
Mr. Ben Chan
1985 Pioneer Tenant

Bench was one of the pioneer tenants of SM City North EDSA when it opened its first outlet and boutique in the mall. Deciding to go against the odds -- the country was in the midst of a major political and economic crisis at that time -- Mr. Ben Chan had faith in the vision of Mr. Henry Sy, Sr. and felt that the brand was ready to move ahead.

Today, the Suyen Group -- of which Bench is a part of -- is a retail conglomerate that operates a chain of both local and international and lifestyle brands many of which are in the SM Malls in the Philippines and China. And in celebration of its many years of partnership with SM, Bench joins the ongoing SM North EDSA 25th Anniversary festivities with a special edition tee and the launch of its Trio Scents.

The fan-girls went home happy

From the 'ahjumma' ('manang' in their 50s) to the tweens and teens, they got their fill of Rain

By Joy M. Gabrillo
Contributor

TOUTED as the biggest K-Pop event to hit Manila, "Intensity" which featured Christian Bautista, U-Kiss and Rain clearly showed the growing popularity of K-Pop in the Philippines.

With only three-week notice, fans found their way to the MOA concert grounds Sept. 11.

It was perfect time to watch the different fan-girls who came to support their idols.

Rain's 'ahjummas'

At around 8 a.m. on the day of the mini concert (in Korea a performance has to last at least three hours to be considered a concert) some 60 to 70 foreign fans had already started to mass near the VIP entrance. The concert was to start at 8 p.m. but the fans were already there to make sure they'd get the best spots in the mosh pit.

Most of the fans were what I would call Rain's "professional" fan-girls" (boys). They're mainly from Japan, Korea, Malaysia, Singapore, Macau, China and even HK.

They've made it their business to follow him around the globe for his concerts, fan meets and other activities. Some have been following Rain around the country since his arrival in Cebu Sept. 1. Rain spent two weeks here to shoot for his TV series Fugitive.

On the day of the concert, they were joined by Pinoy fans, many of whom are members of Cloud PH, Rain's local fan club.

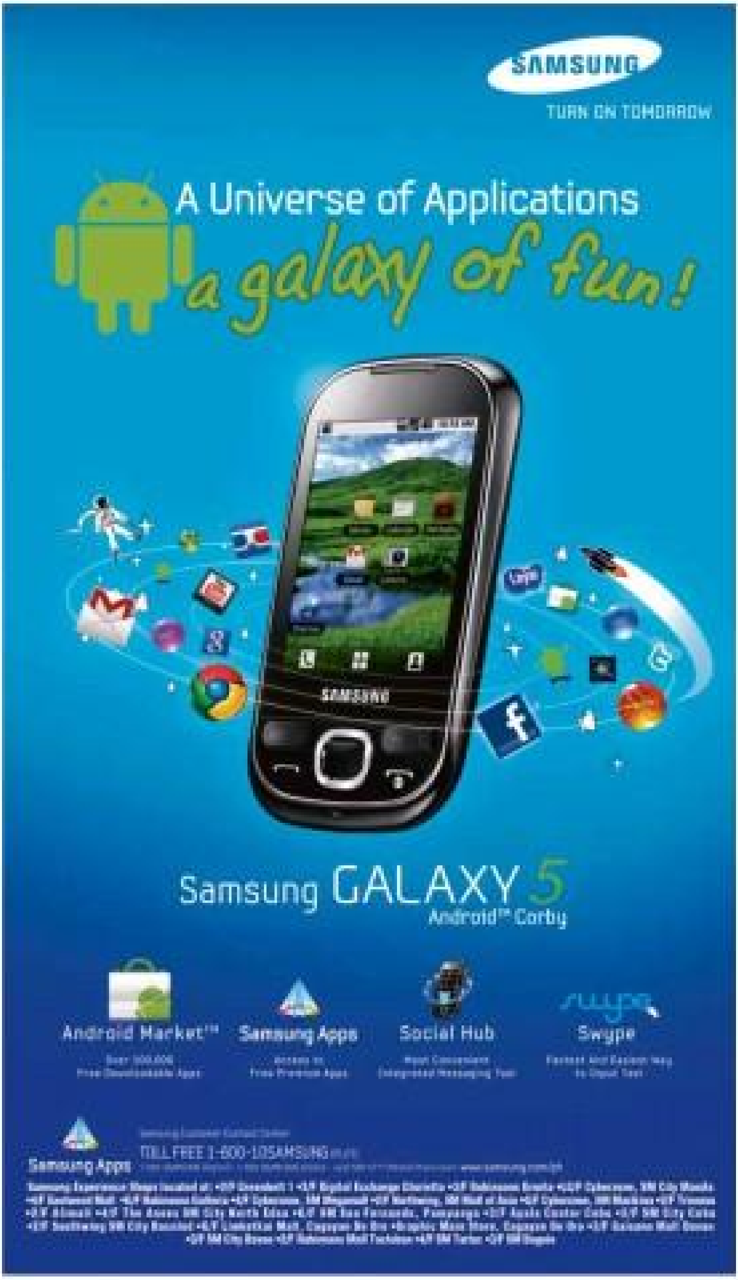

None of them fit the K-Pop fan-girl stereotype—they're certainly not in their teens. Most of Rain's fans are in the 30s to 40s. The age range of Rain's Japanese fans is 40 to 60, while here, most of his fans are in their late 20s to 30s. They are mostly "ahjummas"—or "mommy."

These are mostly women who followed his dramas, the most popular of which was "Full House." I talked to two fans (who requested anonymity) who admitted to being in their 40s. They said they've never imagined being a fan-girl until Rain came along—and they're proud to be his fans.

They initially admired Rain for his good looks and pumped-up performances. They became loyal fans because his life story inspired them. Rain rose above difficulties to be famous.

Since most of these "professional" fans are actually professionals, with high-paying jobs, they can afford to follow Rain

HOME sweet HOME

A solid house is built on clean water

By Avie B. Espinosa

The rainy season brings its own ups and downs. The children are busy at school, and you — the homeowner, parent, or guardian — would most likely be left all alone at home, tending after the garden, fulfilling household chores, and generally making sure your loved ones go back home to a place better than when they left it. The rains can help refresh your surroundings, make them look and smell clean.

The downside to the rainy season, especially if there's too much rain, is that the quality of your tap water can be adversely affected. The resulting floods during and after a heavy storm can contaminate your water supply, thus rendering it unsafe for drinking. The myriad bacteria and viruses brought on by floods can seep into your drinking water, ultimately leading to life-threatening diseases for those unfortunate enough to drink the contaminated water.

How can you make sure, then, that the water you give to your family is free from harmful bacteria and viruses? One solution is to buy purified or mineral water for your family's drinking water supply. However, considering how much water your household consumes in the course of a week, month, and year, you will realize that this is not very economical. You might want to consider purchasing your own water purifying system.

But wouldn't that entail more expenses than buying water from refilling stations? In the long run, operating your own water refilling station would actually pay itself off. And if that water refilling station came at a reasonable price, wouldn't it be a winning deal?

Water Ozonators built by Electronera employs the ozonation process, which has been proven in the medical field to eliminate harmful water-borne bacteria. Ozonators are actually more effective than chlorine, and unlike cancer-causing chlorine, Ozonators are totally safe.

Clear water, good business

The rainy season can now also spell a stream of profits for your household, as well. Clean water not only maintains the strong health of a household; it can, after all, translate to good profits. The Electronera EBF 500 Water Ozonator can produce up to 3,000 gallons of alkaline water per day - enough to sustain the drinking water needs of a sizable village. The Water Ozonator is DOH-certified, and for just P158,000, it comes fully assembled.

It's the perfect startup business for OFWs, retirees, entrepreneurial college or high school graduates, and even professionals looking to have an income-generating activity on the side. The projected return on investment (ROI) can be accomplished in as soon as four months, owing to a production cost of only 50 centavos per day. The Water Ozonator is also highly efficient, unlike the traditional reverse osmosis water filtration system that throws away 70 percent of the water processed.

For such efficiency and affordability of production, the operator gets high oxygenated purified water similar to the world famous Evian of France.

Maintaining the business is a picnic, as well. It doesn't require franchise fees, and the equipment is easy to maintain. Rich villages such as Barangay Ayala Alabang and DMCI Homes - Raya Gardens and The Mayfield Residences - are already enjoying the many advantages of the EBF 500. And for that ultimate innovation in the cleaning of water, Electronera also offers Water Ozonators in transforming your swimming pools into "mineral water pools". Water Ozonators for swimming pools does away with the potentially toxic chlorine and muriatic acid treatments. This also saves pool owners up to P500,000 yearly on chlorine, muriatic acid and other cleaning solution expenses.

Electronera Pool Ozonators are already being used in world-class resorts such as Balai Isabel, City Garden, hacienda San Benito, Oriole Island, El Pueblo De Porta Playa, and the Mermaid Hotel Resort in Boracay.

Electronera guarantees the effectiveness of its Ozonators, or your money back. Call Electronera Inc at 371-2754, 381-0699, 373-0144, 372-2502 or log on to www.electronerainc.com.

The Home Depot set to open two new branches

THE HOME Depot will open two new branches to cater to the growing demands of building, finishing and furnishing needs for all home and building consumers and professionals. The two new branches held its piece of earth in Makati and Subic. The Makati branch, which is located at Chino Roces Avenue, is scheduled to open its doors to its clients and customers by January of next year. The branch, which is the 6th Home Depot among the growing chains of home centers, has a total lot area of 12,322 sqm. Concurrent with the branch opening in Makati, The Home Depot Duty Free Subic will be open by March next year. Its 5,200 sqm store will be situated at the Moonbay Marina Area in Subic. The location is earmarked to invite nearby residents of Clark together with the OFWs, Balikbayans and Pinoy expatriates along Central and Northern Luzon area to stop and shop at The Home Depot. These customers are to enjoy the "tax-and-duty-free" perks and privileges within the Subic Special Economic and Free Port Zone as qualified by SBMA. "In keeping with Home Depot's ongoing commitment to celebrating our customer's needs, we sought to expand year after year by adding more branches and enhancing our products line and services," said Ferdinand Co, managing director of The Home Depot. "With the new breed of homeowners and trade professionals appreciating the convenience and advantages of shopping in one stop shop home centers, the arduous task of living and renovating one's home will be a thing of the past. "Listening to the voices and wishes of our customers is very essential to us. Of equal importance to us was the ability to provide continuous innovation and improved customer experience," added Co. The Home Depot has 5 existing outlets around Luzon; the branches are located at Ortigas, Alabang, Manila Bay, Balintawak and Pampanga. With two more branches to open, the expansion will allow The Home Depot to be of service to more and more consumers. The Home Depot is a joint venture of Cebu Oversea Hardware Co Inc and West Point Industrial Co, both with long and excellent track records in the construction industry.
